From JOMC449 –

JOMC449 Final Project from Molly Sutherland on Vimeo.

Notes: http://vimeo.com/55632357 Note the full set of references in the comments and the direct references to class topics within the discussion.

Pinterest – for INLS089 Cultures of Online Social Networks – on Vimeo. Note sources are referenced in the comments on the video.
Note: http://vimeo.com/40908372

Reddit – using a subReddit to talk about Reddit – for JOMC449. Would be better with more direct references, but note use of video, comments, etc.

LinkedIn – using web.unc.edu to present the site as a paper for JOMC449. Note again the use of notes and the references to class materials.

Thursday November 6 – Data Visualization DC panel at Washington Post – 11-19-2013

Posted on October 31, 2014 by Paul Jones

Panel starts at about 19 minutes in. If you want to see how community is developed in DC, watch from the beginning.

The term "data journalism" is nearly as prevalent as the term "big data." With more and more access to data, improvements in technology, and the transformation of traditional print journalism, today's readers are expecting a different type of reading environment than ever before, which often includes data visualization. Where does this leave traditional journalism? Where is journalism heading?

In DVDC's first roundtable event, four experts will discuss the present state of data journalism, where it is headed, and what that means for both journalists and readers. Moderated by Frank Sesno, Director of the School of Media and Public Affairs at George Washington University, and with panelists from GWU, the Washington Post, NPR, and the New York Times, this promises to be an exciting evening.
